

As a citizen it is imperative to me that the FCC not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has been the greatest piece of legislation in recent years toward the rights of the individual citizen over that of large corporations. I pay for telephone service for my own benefit, not that of solicitors or businesses. I used to receive up to three calls a day and Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has eliminated these calls entirely. This has saved me from much mental anguish and restored time for studying and productivity in my home. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law is a successful demonstration of government of the people, by the people, for the people. May the FCC remember the rights of U.S. citizens over the interests of corrupt and greedy corporations and businesses.
